

SOCIAL INNOVATIVE ENTREPRENEURSHIP

DAILY REPORT – DAY 2

Saturday, 3rd February 2024

The day went according to the program. The breakfast lived up to its expectations as every day before. The variety, the taste, and the overall content of the buffet were more than satisfactory, and everyone could find something according to their taste. The food pallet was filled with the different colors of the Greece cuisine. You could taste the savory Feta cheese, the sweet jam of red-soiled Greek lands, the umami flavor of the variety of cheeses, and many more.

After breakfast at 10, the activities started at the Village Square which is an open-air amphitheater located near the sea performing activities here, with energizer games everybody enjoyed the game called “Walk, stop, jump” the most, and they enjoyed the Polish dance called “Belgium Dance”. After that, we played volleyball and icebreakers.

Next up came lunch which consisted of desert dry chicken and the usual fries with the shallowness of European politics minds. Do not lose hope, however, because when we were provided with the godly tomato sauce which goes under the name ketchup the whole dish was redeemed.

After lunch break, we met at the activity room to do the last activity of the day. The objective of the activity was to gain insights into the diverse realms of entrepreneurship, facilitated by dividing our participants into seven groups. Each group was assigned one of the following entrepreneurial categories for in-depth exploration:

- * Small Business Entrepreneurship
- * Scalable Startup Entrepreneurship
- * Large Company Entrepreneurship
- * Social Entrepreneurship
- * Innovative Entrepreneurship
- * Intrapreneurship
- * Adaptive Entrepreneurship

We were assigned in the groups and tasked with researching their designated category, encapsulating key aspects such as defining characteristics, strategies, and examples. The culmination of this exploration was the creation of a poster that incorporated a visual representation, an explanation, and an example showcasing the essence of the assigned entrepreneurship type.

Now I want to describe the last game of the day: Everyone sat on chairs in a circle, except of one person. That standing participant must ask a question, and if sitting members will answer “YES” they have to change their sitting location. The slowest stays in the middle, and he/she is the one asking.

The last phase of the activity involved each group presenting their findings, fostering an exchange of knowledge and insights among participants through which all of us learned new information about the types of entrepreneurs.

The best for last, dinner was something delicious, we had peas for the main part, peas were the side and peas were also a salad. A thought that came to mind if you asked for water, they would give you peas as a beverage too. The consistency wasn't consistent, and the taste wasn't tasting. But it served the higher purpose of satiating the ravishing hunger of young prosperous minds that will bring brighter futures and development to the vast magical lands of Europe.

It was Polish cultural night. As our first cultural night of the project, nobody expected what was coming. The Polish team positively surprised us with a vibrant and engaging presentation, energetic dances, delicious food, and drinks. Everybody seemed to enjoy it and had a lot of fun. Most importantly, we learned about the Polish culture.
